PASSAGE

There is no good reason why people should tire more easily as they grow older. Constant fatigue is not normal at any age. I believe that it is caused largely by dietary deficiencies. People who eat natural foods are not likely to feel tired. An abundance of B vitamins is most important in outwitting fatigue because they contain 'thiamin', necessary for boundless energy. In other words B vitamins provide the spark which releases the energy from the foods we eat. One type of fatigue in older people may be caused by inadequate amounts of protein foods. Proteins, as we know, contain the amino acids which manufacture the enzymes necessary for the production of energy. It is amazing how many older people still eat only one or two small portions of good protein foods daily. This is in spite of the fact that more than any other foods, proteins are necessary for muscles, glands and energy production. But it is equally important to relax and lead, wherever possible, a tension-free life. The wise ones have learned by experience that there are two secrets for living and working without strain without overdoing, without knowing the meaning of fatigue. These two secrets are : a balanced vitamin-and mineral rich diet, and the art of relaxation.
