A college library is useful in many ways. Its chief functions is to provide all kinds of reading material. These could be used for steady, recreation or reference. Available materials provide students the opportunity not only to gain academic knowledge but also to use this knowledge for practical application. This can be done either by discovering isolated facts or by a piece of organized search. The library also trains students in the foundation of personal opinion and develops in them the ability to asking questions, rather than accept statement at their face value. This can be achieved by careful consideration of available information. By providing voluntary service in his college libraries, students develop in themselves a sense of purpose and respectability. This then becomes a valuable experience for them in their lives ahead. Finally the experience of making optimum use of their college libraries prepares the students to do the same with public libraries too after their leave college.
